WILSON'S SOMERSAULT.

AFTER RETROGRADING everything finetuned with Republicanism the president has changed front until he stands forth as an exponent of the fundamentals of the party which he opposed so violently and bitterly in the last congressional election. His altered point of view is an acute realization of what has been forced on his notice. Though at a distance he has had his ears to the ground so that he may be credited with that quick perception for which he was famous during his second term campaign. This is a shock to his party followers who must see the handwriting on the wall that does not require any further official interpretation. Mr. Wilson sees at last that the American people are more imbued with a sense of nationalism than with a desire for a world's conquest. The average American is grounded in the principle of taking care of his own national affairs and avoiding meddling with those that do not concern him. As a people the citizens of the United States are satisfied to live and expand in their own domain without thought of colonizing foreign lands or becoming mandatory to nations that have not begun to learn the first precepts of self-government. Wilson was the only leader of thought in this country who ever seriously entertained the idea that we should go forth as the Crusaders of democracy even to the extent of sacrificing our own rights that others might be rescued from the domination of imperial masters. So far so good. It is creditable to the judgment of the chief executive that his egotism has not become so obtrusive as to warp his keen discrimination in the judgment of the American people.

While waiving this principle the president also has come to see the necessity for preventing the United States from becoming the bargain counter of the world's industries by urging adoption of a tariff that will protect the American laborer and manufacturer. This plank has been stolen bodily from the Republican enunciation of principles and will not sit well on the stomachs of the free-traders who constitute the majority of the Democratic party. At last, as though the president did not want to leave the slightest distrust of his good motives and complete revulsion of feeling, he closes with a recommendation favoring exemption of wines and beer from the national prohibition which he started on its destructive course. Mr. Wilson, from associating with Europeans, may have imbibed a more liberal policy and come to see that the man who indulges in an appetizer is not tottering on the brink of eternal damnation. The recommendations of the president demonstrate that he has been perusing Republican literature with avidity and has adopted almost every plank favored by the majority in Congress. This will have the effect of reducing the friction between administration leaders and the majority party and prove a helpful means of reaching the common objective of bringing the country back to an understanding of the fact that it is plunging headlong into bankruptcy which will be reached unless the Republicans call a halt.

HELPING THE PROSPECTOR.

DURING THIS REGENERATION of Nevada the State School of Mines should take a more assertive stand than it has done to bring about a better and mutual sentiment between the professional and prospecting classes engaged in developing our mineral resources. The man afield should be encouraged to send specimens to the state institution for analysis. The best way of extending help would be to improve the facilities for making reports on mineral specimens sent to the University. More speed is necessary to make the school a successful adjunct of the mineral empire. Under the ruling system a prospector sending samples to the State School of Mines cannot expect any returns in less than three or four weeks, and if he asks for a quantitative and a qualitative analysis he may wait months before receiving a report. Such information is of little service to the prospector whose business compels him to keep moving from place to place unless he discovers something which looks surprisingly good. The result of the delay at Reno is found in the number of reports that fail to reach the inquirers through their removal from the place where they were when the samples were taken. Prompt returns would stimulate investigation and hold the prospector in a district where the indications favored finding mineral in paying quantities at least until such time as he received the analysis from the university. The branch schools of mines should be utilized to this end. The experience would be good lessons for the students and at the same time furnish field workers with an early report on samples forwarded for scientific opinion. It is manifest that a prospector taking eight or ten samples a day is not in a position to pay for the work of determining the mineral contents and any help that the state would extend would establish a reciprocity that would redound to the benefit of the state.

GRABBING THE GLOBE.

ONE OF THE outstanding features of the treaty of peace is the immense accretions of territory that the British empire is to receive under its terms. Few people realize the tremendous extent of the domains of the British crown. With the British isles as a nucleus, comprising an extent of about 120,000 square miles, the English government started on a policy of expansion about the middle of the eighteenth century. For over 150 years that policy has been steadily pursued until, at the beginning of the war, the empire included the enormous area of 13,153,712 square miles. Exclusive of the polar regions, this represents almost one-quarter of the total land area of the whole world. Under the arrangement entered into with the consent of the American president, the British empire is to be given the directing influence at once over 803,080 square miles of territory, and in all probability, will also get a large slice, if not all, of the 224,830 square miles that remain to be distributed by England and France. It is safe to say that one million square miles of the earth's surface will be added to the already tremendously swollen holdings of the British empire. It is true that the English holdings will go under the name of "mandatory" but everybody familiar with British methods and tenacity in the past knows that a mandatory will be but a stepping stone to complete control in the not distant future. The cost of the war to England has been great, but with this enormous addition to her domain, together with her share of the German cash indemnity that she will receive, the empire will be not only compensated for her war expenditures, but will show, in valuable possessions, a substantial balance on the credit side of the ledger.

(Correspondence Associated Press)
 FAIRBANKS, Alaska, April 3.—Charred timbers and other debris left by the Fairbanks fire which occurred in mid-winter are being cleared away with the melting of the ice which encrusted them. In the early days after the snow and ice has disappeared from Fairbanks, the streets become a mass of mud and the entire population is forced to the sidewalks, so that the clearing of the debris has a double purpose.

MORNING TRAIN CHANGED BACK TO FORMER TIME

Through an inadvertence the schedule for covering the time of arrival and departure for train No. 24 followed the card arranged for the Sunday train when no freight was carried but, as the early hour is not the most acceptable for passengers to crawl out of their berths, it has been deemed expedient to return to the former time which will prevail until the new fast schedule goes into effect on June 16. No. 24 will arrive at 6 o'clock and leave for Goldfield at 6:30. No. 25 will arrive at 9 and leave at 9:30.
